What was the first thing that went through your mind when you realized your competitor made Team Canada?

I was happy for the fact that he gained the recognition of being part of a national team. I knew that this achievement would increase his confidence as he progressed through his career and that future employers would recognize this achievement by providing further opportunities for career advancement.

What made you want to train competitors for Skills Competitions?

I was fortunate to have a strong mentor during the early stages of my career development. I saw training competitors for the Skills competition as a way to provide similar mentorship to young trades people at early stages of their careers.

What do you think sets your competitor apart from the others in their skill area?

My competitors desire to become a high performer in his trade, combined with a high level of professionalism and natural ability, sets him apart from others in his skill area.

What are you most excited to experience in Lyon, France?

I am most excited to feel the energy in the competition that comes from seeing young people applying their skills in top level competition.
